Gouvernance d'entreprise et Code de bonne conduite de l'ALFI

Le Conseil d'administration a la responsabilité de veiller au respect d'un degré élevé de gouvernance d'entreprise et estime, à ce titre, que le Fonds s'est conformé aux meilleures pratiques en vigueur dans l'industrie des fonds luxembourgeois. Le Conseil d'administration a suivi plus particulièrement les principes du Code de bonne conduite de l'ALFI (le « Code »), lequel énonce des principes de bonne gouvernance applicables aux fonds luxembourgeois. Le Conseil d'administration considère que le Fonds a bien observé les principes de ce Code, à tous les égards importants, au cours de cet exercice financier.

Commentaire annuel sur les marchés financiers

Au début de la période de référence, au quatrième trimestre 2022, l'économie mondiale restait sous la pression d'une inflation très élevée et d'un resserrement des politiques monétaires, tandis que certaines grandes régions subissaient également de plein fouet les impacts négatifs de développements spécifiques (pressions sur l'approvisionnement en gaz naturel en Europe et restrictions liées à la Covid en Chine). Par conséquent, la plupart des statistiques économiques publiées au cours du quatrième trimestre ont été légèrement inférieures aux prévisions.

Au premier trimestre 2023, l'économie mondiale s'est ralentie, mais avec de grandes divergences selon les régions. Aux États-Unis et surtout dans la zone euro, le ralentissement a été plus modéré que prévu. Toutefois, en mars, les tensions sur les marchés ont accru l'incertitude. La Chine est restée sur une trajectoire ascendante dans le sillage de sa réouverture post-Covid, ce qui a contribué à limiter le ralentissement des autres économies émergentes. Bien qu'en baisse, l'inflation est demeurée très élevée dans la plupart des pays, les banques centrales poursuivant la relève de leurs taux d'intérêt directeurs. Les marchés des taux d'intérêt ont connu une forte volatilité, tandis que les marchés boursiers ont enregistré des performances positives, notamment grâce à un bon mois de janvier.

Au deuxième trimestre 2023, une grande partie de l'économie mondiale a continué à connaître la stagflation (faible croissance et inflation très élevée). La baisse de l'inflation s'est à peine répercutée sur les indices sous-jacents (hors énergie et alimentation). Les banques centrales ont poursuivi la relève de leurs taux directeurs, mais à un rythme plus lent qu'au cours des trimestres précédents. En ce qui concerne les marchés financiers, les actions ont progressé tandis que les obligations ont été volatiles, bien qu'à des degrés différents, selon les régions et les échéances.

Au troisième trimestre 2023, l'économie américaine s'est bien comportée, tandis que dans la zone euro et en Chine, la situation économique a une nouvelle fois manqué au rendez-vous. L'inflation a continué sa baisse dans la plupart des pays, mais reste trop élevée selon les banques centrales. Les banques centrales des pays développés ont poursuivi la relève de leurs taux directeurs, mais à un rythme plus lent qu'au cours des trimestres précédents. En revanche, certaines banques centrales des économies émergentes ont commencé à réduire leurs taux d'intérêt.

États-Unis

L'activité économique aux États-Unis est restée relativement forte au quatrième trimestre 2022, bien qu'elle ait connu un ralentissement. Les secteurs très exposés à la hausse des taux d'intérêt ont montré des signes évidents d'érosion, à commencer par l'immobilier. L'activité manufacturière a également reculé, l'indice ISM manufacturier laissant entrevoir une contraction, en partie due à la valeur élevée du dollar américain. Toutefois, l'indice ISM des services a révélé une activité économique très forte. Le marché du travail est également demeuré dynamique, avec la création de nombreux emplois, malgré les tendances à la baisse. Les taux de chômage sont restés très bas, ce qui a continué à contribuer à la hausse des salaires. Bien que l'inflation demeure très élevée, elle est néanmoins tombée à 7,1 % en novembre, l'inflation de base s'établissant à 6,0 %. La Fed a continué de se concentrer sur la lutte contre l'inflation et a relevé le taux des fonds fédéraux de 75 points de base en novembre et de 50 points de base en décembre (ce qui porte la fourchette cible à 4,25 % - 4,5 %). Enfin, sur le plan politique, les élections de mi-mandat ont laissé la Chambre des représentants sous le contrôle des républicains, les démocrates conservant le contrôle du Sénat.

Au début de l'année 2023, les études économiques aux États-Unis sont mitigés : l'indice ISM manufacturier s'installe en territoire négatif, mais, après une brève baisse au début de l'année, l'indice ISM des services se redresse bien, pour se rapprocher de la neutralité en mars 2023. Le marché du travail aux États-Unis est resté très dynamique : les créations d'emplois ont surpris par leur nombre élevé en janvier 2023 et, dans une moindre mesure, en février. Le taux de chômage aux États-Unis a atteint un niveau historiquement bas en janvier (3,4 %), avant de remonter à 3,6 % en février, principalement en raison de l'entrée de personnes sur le marché du travail. L'inflation aux États-Unis a poursuivi sa baisse, bien qu'à un rythme très modéré : l'indice général a augmenté de 6,0 % sur 12 mois en février (6,4 % en janvier), tandis que l'indice sous-jacent s'est établi à 5,5 % (après avoir atteint 5,6 %). À la fin du premier trimestre, les craintes de récession se sont multipliées à la suite de la faillite de la SVB et de deux banques plus petites, ce qui a suscité des inquiétudes quant à la stabilité financière et aux conditions de prêt de l'économie réelle. Face au triple défi d'une inflation élevée, d'une croissance en baisse et de tensions financières croissantes, la Fed a poursuivi son resserrement monétaire, bien qu'à un rythme plus lent. Elle a relevé le taux des fonds fédéraux de 25 points de base en février, puis à nouveau en mars pour élargir la fourchette à 4,75/5,00 %.

Face à la hausse rapide des taux d'intérêt de la Fed, l'économie aux États-Unis a ralenti au deuxième trimestre 2023, mais de manière plus progressive que prévu à la fin du premier trimestre. Les conséquences de la faillite de plusieurs banques régionales en mars sont, notamment, restées limitées, et les craintes d'une crise financière se sont apaisées. Les indicateurs économiques ont diminué (davantage dans l'industrie que dans les services), mais n'ont pas signalé de récession imminente. Bien que le taux de chômage ait augmenté en mai (3,7 %, le taux le plus élevé depuis octobre 2022), le marché du travail a néanmoins continué à créer plus d'emplois que prévu. Concernant l'inflation, l'indice général a poursuivi son ralentissement (4,0 % sur 12 mois en mai après avoir atteint 5,0 % en mars et un pic de 9,1 % en juin 2022), notamment en raison des prix de l'énergie. Toutefois, cette tendance a été moins marquée sur l'inflation sous-jacente (5,3 % en mai après avoir atteint 5,6 % en mars et un pic de 6,6 % en septembre 2022). Après avoir relevé les taux des fonds fédéraux de 25 points de base en mai (à 5,0 - 5,25 %), la Fed les a maintenus inchangés en juin, tout en indiquant une forte probabilité de nouvelles hausses d'ici la fin de l'année.

Au troisième trimestre, malgré la forte hausse des taux d'intérêt, l'économie aux États-Unis s'est avérée plus croissante que prévu. Cette résistance s'explique, entre autres, par les niveaux plus élevés d'épargne des ménages et les mesures de soutien public à l'investissement. Les indicateurs ISM de septembre montrent une forte activité dans les Services et un ralentissement de la contraction dans l'Industrie. Bien que ralentie, la création d'emplois est restée à un niveau élevé, le taux de chômage augmentant légèrement (3,8 % en août contre 3,6 % en juin). L'indice général de l'inflation a de nouveau grimpé (3,7 % en août contre 3,0 % en juin), principalement en raison de la hausse des prix des carburants, néanmoins l'indice sous-jacent a continué à ralentir (4,3 % en août contre 4,8 % en juin). La Fed a relevé les taux des fonds fédéraux de 25 points de base en juillet (portant la fourchette à 5,25 - 5,50 %), mais les a maintenus inchangés en septembre, laissant la porte ouverte à d'autres hausses de taux éventuelles.

Zone euro

Au quatrième trimestre 2022, l'économie de la zone euro est restée sous la pression des prix de l'énergie en raison du conflit entre la Russie et l'Ukraine, qui a été une source d'incertitude majeure à l'approche de l'hiver. Toutefois, même si elles indiquent un ralentissement, les statistiques économiques ont été légèrement supérieures aux prévisions. Par conséquent, le PIB de la zone euro, et notamment celui de l'Allemagne, a poursuivi sa hausse. Les indicateurs de confiance des entreprises pour le quatrième trimestre (PMI, en particulier) ont laissé entrevoir un ralentissement de l'activité économique, mais ce ralentissement a été de faible ampleur. Malgré une légère baisse en novembre (à 10,1 %, avec de grandes différences entre les pays de la zone euro), l'inflation a atteint des niveaux stupéfiants et a continué à se propager de l'Énergie à de nombreux secteurs. Soucieuse d'enrayer cette tendance inflationniste, la BCE a annoncé une hausse de 75 points de base de ses taux directeurs en octobre, suivie d'une augmentation de 50 points de base en décembre, portant le taux de la facilité de dépôt à 2,0 %. Enfin, après avoir pris des mesures au coup par coup, les gouvernements des États membres de l'UE ont progressé dans la recherche de mesures communes visant à plafonner le prix du gaz naturel à la fin de l'année.

Les indicateurs économiques de la zone euro ont agréablement surpris au premier trimestre 2023, laissant entrevoir une stagnation de l'activité économique plutôt qu'une chute brutale. Les facteurs à considérer ont été la baisse des prix du gaz et la reprise économique en Chine. L'indice PMI manufacturier a continué d'indiquer une contraction, mais son homologue des Services est redevenu positif. Le marché du travail est demeuré dynamique, le taux de chômage ayant atteint son plus bas niveau historique (6,6 %) en février. Les pressions inflationnistes sont restées très fortes : si l'indice général de l'inflation a nettement ralenti (+6,9 % sur 12 mois en mars après un pic à 10,6 % en octobre 2022), notamment grâce à des effets de base négatifs sur les prix de l'énergie, ce n'est pas le cas de l'indice sous-jacent qui a poursuivi sa hausse (+5,7 % en février, le taux le plus élevé observé depuis la création de l'euro). Déterminée à réduire l'inflation, la BCE a relevé ses taux directeurs de 50 points de base en février, puis en mars, pour porter le taux d'intérêt de la facilité de dépôt à 3,0 % et le taux d'intérêt des opérations de refinancement à 3,5 %. Toutefois, en mars, la montée des tensions financières aux États-Unis, ainsi que ses répercussions en Europe (faillite de Crédit suisse et craintes temporaires concernant la Deutsche Bank) ont attiré l'attention sur de nouveaux risques.

Au deuxième trimestre 2023, l'activité économique de la zone euro reste pénalisée par la hausse des taux d'intérêt, l'impact d'une forte inflation sur le pouvoir d'achat des ménages ainsi que par un environnement international économiquement atone en raison du ralentissement aux États-Unis et en Chine. Après deux trimestres de légère baisse du PIB au quatrième trimestre 2022 et au premier trimestre 2023, les indicateurs relatifs au deuxième trimestre ont été pour la plupart inférieurs aux attentes. Les études économiques ont mis en évidence une divergence très importante entre l'Industrie (toujours en difficulté après les chocs de ces dernières années) et les Services (où l'activité est restée dynamique, mais s'est ralentie). L'inflation dans la zone euro a continué de baisser : sur 12 mois, l'indice général s'est établi à 5,5 % en juin, après avoir atteint 6,9 % en mars et un pic de 10,6 % en octobre 2022. Cependant, cette baisse de l'inflation ne s'est propagée que très modérément à l'indice sous-jacent, qui a augmenté de 5,4 % en juin après avoir atteint un pic de 5,7 % en mars. En outre, les salaires ont fortement augmenté au cours du premier trimestre. La BCE a relevé ses taux de 25 points de base en mai, puis à nouveau de 25 points de base en juin, portant le taux d'intérêt de la facilité de dépôt à 3,5 %. La BCE a également laissé entrevoir une hausse supplémentaire probable en juillet.

L'activité économique dans la zone euro a manqué au rendez-vous. Les chiffres de la croissance du deuxième trimestre montrent une quasi-stagnation (augmentation du PIB de 0,1 %), après la stagnation déjà observée au premier trimestre. Alors que les pays très exposés aux Services (France et Espagne) ont maintenu un rythme légèrement positif, les pays très présents dans l'Industrie ont connu une croissance presque nulle (Allemagne) ou négative (Italie). Les enquêtes de conjoncture du troisième trimestre (notamment les indices PMI) ont montré que le déclin déjà observé dans l'Industrie commençait à s'étendre au secteur des Services. Malgré des signes de ralentissement, le marché du travail est resté dynamique, le taux de chômage demeurant à 6,4 % en août, son niveau le plus bas depuis la création de la zone euro. L'inflation a fortement diminué : en septembre, la hausse sur 12 mois de l'indice général a été ramenée à 4,3 % (contre 5,5 % en juin), et celle de l'indice sous-jacent à 4,5 % (contre 5,5 %). La BCE a relevé ses taux directeurs de 25 points de base en juillet, puis à nouveau en septembre, portant le taux d'intérêt de la facilité de dépôt à 4,0 %. Cependant, la BCE s'est abstenue de présenter de nouvelles augmentations comme probables, affirmant sa confiance dans le niveau actuel des taux d'intérêt pour continuer à faire baisser l'inflation.

Marchés émergents

Au quatrième trimestre 2022, la croissance des économies émergentes s'est, de manière générale, maintenue. Des signes de ralentissement n'ont été observés que dans un petit nombre de pays d'Amérique latine (Chili) et d'Europe de l'Est (Roumanie). Simultanément, l'économie en Chine a redémarré un peu plus vite que prévu, ce qui a amélioré les perspectives de croissance mondiale et celles de tous les pays émergents. Dans l'ensemble, l'inflation s'est stabilisée, bien qu'elle ait continué à augmenter dans un certain nombre de pays. Une baisse tangible de l'inflation n'a été observée qu'au Brésil, dans le sillage de la baisse des prix des matières premières (énergie, alimentation et autres) et d'un resserrement monétaire vigoureux. Les banques centrales ont poursuivi leurs cycles de hausse des taux d'intérêt, mais ceux-ci n'ont pas été mis en œuvre de manière identique dans tous les pays. Les banques centrales d'Amérique latine et d'Europe centrale et orientale ont donné l'impression que ces hausses de taux allaient ralentir, voire faire une pause, tandis qu'en Asie (Indonésie et Philippines, en particulier), un resserrement rapide a été adopté comme une position proactive contre l'inflation.

Le premier trimestre 2023 a été marqué par une activité plus forte que prévu en Chine, stimulée par une forte reprise des ventes de logements et des mesures budgétaires favorables. En revanche, la situation économique a été bien pire dans d'autres économies émergentes, bien qu'elles se soient montrées résistantes. Les chiffres de l'inflation de janvier ont montré des baisses plus faibles que prévu et même, dans certains cas, une hausse continue de l'inflation sous-jacente due aux mécanismes d'indexation des salaires. Toutefois, les chiffres de l'inflation de février ont ensuite indiqué un ralentissement plus général. Dans le sillage de la forte révision à la baisse de leurs anticipations concernant la trajectoire des taux directeurs dans les économies développées, les marchés ont également modifié leurs prévisions concernant les économies émergentes. Néanmoins, dans ces économies, la politique monétaire a continué d'être menée principalement en fonction du contexte local, en recherchant le bon équilibre entre les hausses de taux d'intérêt et les pauses dans les hausses de taux d'intérêt, en fonction des tendances et des attentes en matière d'inflation. En Chine, la Banque populaire de Chine (BPC) a réduit de manière inattendue le taux de réserves obligatoires (TRO) afin d'enrayer la forte augmentation des taux interbancaires et de maintenir suffisamment de liquidités dans le système financier.

Au deuxième trimestre 2023, la publication des chiffres du PIB du premier trimestre indique que l'activité économique a mieux résisté que prévu dans la plupart des pays émergents, en raison du ralentissement de l'inflation, de la diminution des pressions sur les chaînes d'approvisionnement grâce à la réouverture de la Chine, des politiques budgétaires expansionnistes dans certains pays et de la plus grande résilience des économies européennes et américaines. Les indicateurs de haute fréquence ont confirmé un scénario d'atterrissage en douceur, sans toutefois laisser entrevoir un fort rebond. En Chine, les données sur la croissance du deuxième trimestre ont indiqué un ralentissement plus marqué que prévu dans les secteurs de la Construction et de la Production manufacturière. La BPC a réagi en diminuant la plupart de ses taux de 10 points de base. Certaines banques centrales (Afrique du Sud, Colombie, Malaisie, Thaïlande, Philippines et Turquie) ont à nouveau relevé leurs taux en raison de l'inflation, mais aussi des pressions exercées sur leurs monnaies par la révision à la hausse des attentes du marché concernant la Réserve fédérale américaine et la montée des tensions géopolitiques. Toutefois, en mai, les chiffres de l'inflation ont baissé, ce qui fut une surprise générale, et la plupart des banques centrales sont devenues plus conciliantes. Malgré la forte volatilité des marchés, les principaux indices (GBI, EMBI, MSCI) ont surperformé au cours du deuxième trimestre.

Les données en Chine pour le troisième trimestre demeurent fragiles, notamment dans le secteur de l'Immobilier, les promoteurs immobiliers étant confrontés à de nouvelles difficultés en matière d'endettement. Cependant, les données publiées en août ont dépassé les attentes, laissant entrevoir que le pire avait été enregistré au troisième trimestre. Néanmoins, malgré les attentes d'une reprise cyclique progressive, la Chine connaît actuellement un ralentissement à long terme. Le principal facteur de ce ralentissement a été et restera le secteur de l'Immobilier. Le gouvernement chinois a réagi en prenant un certain nombre de mesures politiques, mais celles-ci n'ont pas été suffisantes pour stimuler rapidement la croissance, et la transition à long terme vers un modèle de croissance moins accélérée en matière de logement et d'exportations reste une priorité.

Dans la majeure partie des pays émergents, la dynamique macroéconomique est demeurée faible, mais a montré des signes d'amélioration. Cependant, les exportations semblent avoir atteint leur niveau le plus bas. En raison de l'affaiblissement des effets de base, de la hausse des prix des denrées alimentaires et de l'énergie ainsi que des pressions monétaires, la baisse de l'inflation s'est ralentie en août et a eu un impact sur le pouvoir d'achat des ménages. Or, à l'exception de quelques cas atypiques (Turquie, Russie, Thaïlande, par exemple), les banques centrales ont commencé et poursuivi leur assouplissement monétaire en baissant leurs taux. Néanmoins, nombreux sont ceux qui se sont avérés plus prudents à la suite des déclarations de la Réserve fédérale américaine et de la possibilité de maintenir des taux élevés plus longtemps. L'ouverture du groupe BRICS à six nouveaux membres (Argentine, Égypte, Iran, Éthiopie, Arabie saoudite et Émirats arabes unis) et l'intégration de l'Inde dans l'indice EMGBI figurent parmi les événements majeurs du troisième trimestre.
